The explosion wrought dreadful havor to the pool room which was located in the rear of the Turf exchange. The house stands on Central avenue, in the heart of the city. When the explosion occurred the pool room was crowded with people, and all went down in a mass of wreckage. R. C. Chambers, one of the proprietors of the club, had both legs and both wrists broken. The bones were set last night and today it is believed he will recover.

Upon entering the cellar he found twenty or thirty gallons of gasoline oversigned by large products. gasoline overflowed in large pools on the floor. Fearing an explosion he rushed to an open window and closed it. He says the door was then opened

All of the injured are receiving the best of treatment. The large staff of physicians of the city have volunteered their services and are looking after the wants of the unfortunate victims.

Charles Walker, the partner of Mr. Chambers, stated today that the wrecked portion of the building will be rebuilt at once. He, with several employes, was on the second floor when the explosion occurred, but all escaped to the street in safety.

Hot Springs, Ark., Dec. 25.—An inquest was held over the remains of William Helwig, the first person to die as a result of the injuries received in the Turf Exchange explosion, and it has developed that the authorities are going to make a thorough examination of the carelessness which, it is alleged, is supposed to have caused the explosion. Officers were stationed about the wreck immediately after the explosion wreck immediately after the explosion and they have kept all persons away since. The Italians were in an immigrant coach, bound from New York to New Orleans. When the train came to a stop before the draw of the long Bay St. Louis bridge, which spans an inlet of the guif, a newsboy entered the coach with several toy snakes wound about his arms. The Italians became frightened and began collecting in the further end of the compartment. The newsboy pursued them with the snakes and a stampede ensued. ar. Baker's story rivals the mythical tales of Captain Kidd, and, moreover, bears the unmistakable stamp of truth. He says that his father marched from Vera Cruz to México City with General Scott's army during the Mexican war. He and a tentmate, after plotting for weeks, dug their way into some of the richest cathedrals and pillaged them of their fabulous wealth of all sorts of valuable stones and huge golden images. For hours they looted, carrying their burdens of precious stones to a hiding place beneath the flagstones in a cathedral yard.

Shortly afterward Baker's companion died. Baker returned to his home in New York and then went to Hillsdale, Mich. Fifteen years after plundering the cathedrals he confided his story to an intimate friend. The friend wrote to the Mexican government, asking "if there would be any chance of a division of the spoils" if he should tell the government where it could find the sacred and valuable altar decorations that had been stolen. In a letter bearing the official seal the Hillsdale man received warning that "if he knew of anyone who had a hand in the notorious pillaging, or if he himself participated in it, he would do well to forget all he knew about it and keep quiet, lest his life be sacrificed in revenge for the desecration of the cathedrals. Baker took the advice, but still intended to secure the treasure he had buried.
